The Italian mid-engine coupé was first presented by Ferrari in Geneva in 1994. It was immediately apparent that the new Ferrari was significantly superior to its predecessor, the 348. The F355 featured technical innovations that finally brought the brand into the modern era in this segment. The new model also set new standards in terms of workmanship and appearance, virtually matching the expensive 12-cylinder models. In terms of performance, the F355 is in no way inferior to its successor, the 360 Modena.

This Ferrari F355 was originally delivered in the very rare color Rosso Barchetta with beige leather. It was ordered and registered by Nestore Morosini in Milan. Nestore Morosini was a friend of Enzo Ferrari. The F355 remained in its home country until 2015, when it was sold to a collector in Düsseldorf, who immediately spent over €10,000 on a major service for the Ferrari. Now this attractive Ferrari F355 GTB Berlinetta is back on the market.
